The module introduces you to key concepts in social sciences. As such this module forms an important stepping-stone to the applied modules that follow in years 2 and 3. You will be encouraged to comprehend, evaluate and compare the major perspectives in sociology and a number of key theories in psychology, and begin to use these perspectives as tools for understanding the kinds of psychosocial problems that exist in society. The module requires you to explore and reflect on key societal contexts which influence individuals' daily lives, eg demographic changes and socio-economic structures, including age, gender, cultural diversity and different ethnicities. A central theme will be the interaction of 'self' and social context. The learning from the teaching and wider reading will be applied to real life situations.
