

Dear Sir

The resignation of Dr Philip Campbell from the Review team was entirely proper. It still appears to me, however, that it is still cannot be claimed that no 'Review team members have a predetermined view on climate change and climate science'. Remarks attributed to Prof Boulton show quite clearly that he does have a predetermined view e.g.

<http://bishophill.squarespace.com/blog/2010/2/13/boulton-braced-for-trouble.html>

The selection of Review team members has, in my opinion, shown poor judgement on the part of Sir Muir Russell and damaged the credibility of the review before it has even started. That he could even consider Dr Campbell to be an appropriate member given the editorials that have been published in Nature magazine is little short of astonishing.

Regards

David Shepherd